Global brands shun Google

Big brands fund terror

Household names unwittingly pay extremist supporters and pornographers as adverts dumped online

TIMES INVESTIGATION

About Moatous Head of investigations

Some of the world's biggest brands are unwittingly funding Islamic extremists, says a Times investigation. See the full story and website, The Times can reveal.

An analysis of ads placed by brands of large companies, charities and charities, including Mercedes-Benz, Waitrose, Marks & Spencer and British Airways, on YouTube and other websites and YouTube videos created by supporters of terrorist groups such as Islamic State, Al Qaeda and the violent pro-Nazi faction.

The practice is likely to generate tens of millions of pounds a month for extremists. An advert appearing alongside a video of a beheading, for example, typically earns whoever posts the video $760 for every 1,000 views. Some of the most popular extremist YouTube videos have more than one million hits.

Big advertising agencies, which typically act as middlemen between clients, have been accused of pushing brands into online advertising, to boost their sales.

Companies are concerned that they are paying huge mark-ups for digital programming that they do not buy advertising in return. Leaked documents from one agency show that it took about 40 per cent of its advert-buying income in 2015 came from hidden kick-backs from the platforms' revenue streams. One source said it mainly derived from mark-ups applied to digital commercials.

Analysis by The Times of online extremist videos revealed many black lists designed to prevent digital adverts from appearing next to it are not fit for purpose.

On YouTube, an advert for the new Mercedes-Benz Class E has been served to a pro-Isis video that has been viewed more than 15,000 times. The commercial appears a few seconds after the start of the video, before the viewer sees anything jihad over a picture of an Isis flag and an anti-aircraft gun. A commercial for the Sandals Resorts, the luxury holiday operator, is advertised next to a video promoted by the Al Naba'a, an African jihadis group affiliated to Al-Qaeda. Last year a Sandals spokesman warned that it was "very eager" to stop its adverts appearing next to interviews with Isis leaders, and said YouTube had "not properly segregated the video as sensitive".
